

Kelley Lynch is a visual storyteller, writer, and designer with more than 20 years of experience identifying, capturing, and bringing to life unique and emotionally engaging stories for nonprofits, NGOs, development organizations, and donor agencies worldwide.

Built over two decades of living and working across Africa and Asia, Kelley's diverse skill set, combined with the breadth of her experience and her understanding of international development, sets her work apart.

Kelley has written, photographed, designed, and published more than 20 books in addition to videos and stories focused on pastoralism, livelihoods, food security, education, water, sanitation and hygiene, disaster risk reduction, maternal and child health, nutrition, faith-based initiatives, environment and resilience.

Kelley's photographs, stories, and publications have raised awareness, communicated with donors, advocated with policy-makers, and mobilized millions in support of programs for vulnerable populations.

Her clients include UNICEF, USAID, the Global Partnership for Education, the World Bank, the British Council, Save the Children, CARE, and World Vision.

Kelley is based in Washington, DC.